Cross-examined: Provious to the date of delivery, goods are always at sellers risk. J. H. Cheverton, eworn, deposed: Never ner, heard of a sustain giving a right to a second the inspection. Cross-examined.—Had bought and sol goods in such contracts as the one in question, fore goods in such contracts as the one is question, but but never given or wanted a second inspection. If a second inspection were granted and nied the goods then found damaged, he would not take the goods.

This concluded the case for the defendants. Mr. Pollard then replied. First referring to the fifth count of the declaration—the obligation defendants were under to return money pair after the consideration had failed, he observed that from Mr. Eimboke's evidence, he seemed to be only desirant of getting money, no matter bund how, and of sticking to it. His principle man was no doubt to get money above all things. without regard to the means. From the evidonicof defendants' witnesses, the commercial morality of this colony was certainly different from what he had supposed. If such principle mere held and in practice, there was fittle lupe of sufe contracts being any longer made by merchants, without continual reference to The Chief-Justice the suinmed up the case to the jury. The case had certainly been fought with gloves on, although there had been some sparring, but he was sure this was not meanb. but for the determining of a grave commercial rome question. He was afraid however they would id in not in this instance obtain what they sought, the or a decision that would be of any future benefit. However, the effort of bottle parties to have thu question determined at considerable expense was d to certainly most praisoworthy, but as had already been remarked, the case was a peculiar one, and letail. Ruch a one as perhaps would never arise again.

The question force for the jury, as well as the real issue was, did the defendants, or did they ou not, deliver the goods according to the terms of ction, the contract? Did not the permission given for The a second inspection re-open the matter after it th of was once closed. His Lordship then read over when the evidence, in commenting upon which he remore marked that it was for the jury to determine ished, whother the first inspection was to assist the importur as against the ship owner, or whether asked as between vendor and vendes? Did plaintiff whole waive their right to a second inspection extra- by paying the money? Was it the intention put in that the inspection on the 10th of June, was goods, to be final, or was there to be another. No And custom had been proved either one way or they another. Regarding the law of the case he custom had been proved wither one way or the inspection. If there was no right of a roken second inspection, the defendants had no right story to refund the money. The question was really resolved into a plain question of fact, was there; e idea or was there not a right for a second inspection? The jury retired, and after an absence of twenty minutes returned, just before seven relock, with a verdiet for the plaintiffs, the value of the eleven rejected bales to be refunded to them, and the defendants to deliver to plaintiffs the thirteen sound bales.
